The current economic system, based on individualism and competition, is unsustainable and is leading to the destruction of the planet. This is the central argument of the groundbreaking book From Ego System To Eco System Economies, by Dr. Jane Smith.

Smith argues that the ego system, which emphasizes self-interest and competition, is at odds with the eco system, which emphasizes cooperation and sustainability. The ego system leads to a number of problems, including:

- Environmental degradation
- Social inequality

- Economic instability

Smith proposes a new economic system, based on cooperation and sustainability, that she believes can create a more just and equitable world.

The eco system economy would be based on the following principles:

- Cooperation: The eco system economy would be based on cooperation rather than competition. This means that businesses would work together to create a more sustainable and equitable economy.
- Sustainability: The eco system economy would be based on the principle of sustainability. This means that businesses would operate in a way that does not harm the environment or future generations.
- Equity: The eco system economy would be based on the principle of equity. This means that everyone would have a fair chance to succeed, regardless of their race, gender, or background.

Smith believes that the eco system economy is the only way to create a sustainable and just future. She argues that we need to move away from the ego system and embrace the eco system if we want to create a better world for ourselves and our children.
