By Susannah Cahalan

In 2008, Susannah Cahalan was a 24-year-old journalist living in New York City. She had a bright future ahead of her, but her life was turned upside down when she suddenly began experiencing a series of bizarre symptoms. She lost her ability to speak, write, and walk. She was diagnosed with a rare autoimmune disorder that attacked her brain.

Cahalan spent the next four weeks in the hospital, undergoing a battery of tests and treatments. Doctors were baffled by her condition, and she feared for her life. But through it all, she never gave up hope. She kept a journal of her experiences, and she eventually wrote a book about her ordeal called Head Case: My Brain and Other Wonders.

Head Case is a gripping and thought-provoking exploration of the human brain. Cahalan draws from neuroscience, psychology, and personal experience to paint a vivid picture of the brain's intricate workings. She shows how the brain can be both a source of wonder and a source of pain.

Cahalan's story is an inspiration to anyone who has ever struggled with mental illness. It is a reminder that even in the darkest of times, there is always hope. With courage and determination, we can overcome any challenge.
