Grammar

Dragonese grammar is relatively simple, but there are a few key differences between it and English grammar.

- Dragonese is a subject-verb-object language, meaning that the subject of a sentence comes before the verb and the object comes after the verb.
- Dragonese does not have articles (a, an, the), so you do not need to use them when speaking or writing in Dragonese.
- Dragonese uses postpositions instead of prepositions. This means that the preposition comes after the noun or pronoun it is modifying.
- Dragonese has a rich system of verb tenses, including the present, past, future, perfect, and imperfect.

Vocabulary

The Dragonese vocabulary is vast and varied, but there are a few key words and phrases that you will need to know to get started.

- I - ka
- You - ta
- He - sha
- She - sha
- It - mi
- We - ra
- You (plural) - ta
- They - sha
- Dragon - drakon
- Fire - fu
- Water - aqua
