Smallwood's political career began in the 1930s, when he was elected to the Newfoundland House of Assembly. He quickly became a vocal critic of the colonial government and advocated for responsible government. In 1940, he founded the Newfoundland People's Party and led the campaign for Confederation with Canada.

Premier of Newfoundland and Labrador

In 1949, Newfoundland joined Canada, and Smallwood became its first Premier. He held the position for 23 years, during which time he oversaw a period of unprecedented economic and social transformation. He established the Newfoundland and Labrador Power Commission, which brought electricity to rural areas, and he created the Newfoundland and Labrador Housing Corporation, which provided affordable housing to thousands of families.

Smallwood was a master politician, known for his charisma and his ability to connect with voters. He was also a shrewd negotiator, and he secured significant federal funding for Newfoundland and Labrador. However, he was also a controversial figure, criticized for his authoritarian style and his suppression of dissent.

The Schemer and the Dreamer

Smallwood was a complex and contradictory figure. He was a schemer, willing to use any means necessary to achieve his goals. He was also a dreamer, with a vision for a better future for Newfoundland and Labrador.

The book "Joey Smallwood: Schemer and Dreamer" explores this duality, providing a nuanced portrait of a man who left an indelible mark on Canadian history. It is a must-read for anyone interested in the life of this enigmatic and influential figure.
