Signs: Enlarged abdomen, swollen teats, clear vaginal discharge, increased appetite, and nesting behavior

Nutritional Requirements: Pregnant dogs need a high-quality diet with increased calories and nutrients

Exercise: Moderate exercise is beneficial, but avoid strenuous activities

Labor and Delivery

Stages of Labor: Three distinct stages characterized by contractions and the passing of puppies

Duration: Typically 12-24 hours, but can vary

Signs: Restlessness, panting, nesting behavior, and a drop in body temperature

Home Birthing: First-time or low-risk pregnancies can be handled at home with proper preparation

Postpartum Care

Recovery: Dogs usually recover within 24-48 hours

Nursing: Puppies nurse frequently, and the mother will need plenty of food and water

Hygiene: Keep the birthing area clean and monitor the mother for any signs of infection

Socialization: It's crucial to gradually introduce puppies to humans and other animals

Emotional Support for Your Dog

Bonding: Pregnancy strengthens the bond between humans and their dogs

Stress Reduction: Provide a calm and stress-free environment

Emotional Sensitivity: Dogs can sense their humans' emotions and respond accordingly

Adjustment: Help your dog adjust to the changes brought by a new baby

Tips for a Smooth Pregnancy and Delivery

Regular Veterinary Checkups: Ensure your dog receives proper prenatal care

Puppy-Proofing Your Home: Create a safe and comfortable environment for both mother and puppies

Preparation: Gather necessary supplies such as a birthing box, whelping pads, and puppy formula

Education: Educate yourself about canine pregnancy and labor to be prepared for any situation

"What To Expect When Your Humans Are Expecting" empowers dog owners to provide exceptional care for their beloved companions during pregnancy and beyond. By understanding the physical and emotional challenges involved, readers can ensure a smooth and enjoyable experience for both humans and their furry friends.
