The men were Richard Bangs, Ron Hayes, and Mike Masar. Bangs was a young adventurer who had already rafted the Grand Canyon twice. Hayes was a world-renowned kayaker. Masar was a filmmaker who had documented some of the most extreme adventures in the world.

The three men had been planning their trip for years. They knew that it would be dangerous, but they were confident that they could make it through the canyon safely.

They began their journey in May 1983. The water was high and the rapids were running fast. The men quickly realized that they were in over their heads.

They faced one challenge after another. They were flipped out of their rafts multiple times. They were pinned against rocks. They were even swept away by the current.

But through it all, they never gave up. They worked together as a team and they never lost their sense of humor.

After 21 days, they finally reached the end of the canyon. They had made it through the world's most dangerous river.

Their journey was an inspiration to people all over the world. It showed that anything is possible if you have the courage to try.
